

Terra and Luna - or how the moon destroyed the earth

geschrieben von Heiner Flassbeck und Friederike Spiecker | 26. Mai 2022

Can there be a better business in this world? One claims to be a computer genius and to have understood that the currencies of this world issued by the states are unstable, inflation-prone and in general threatened with extinction because they are far too inflexible with their national limitations on the one hand and too centralistic on the other. Consequently, they would create a currency themselves that would be available to everyone and could be used globally at any time. Because something like this already exists in the form of Bitcoin, whose wild fluctuations do not exactly distinguish it as a “currency,” they claim to have created a cryptocurrency that has a fixed exchange rate to the U.S. dollar.
